

Student Life: Stage 4 Choosing an Area of Practice

www.ahbl.ca/students

One day you feel ready to be Alan Dershowitz, Atticus Finch and Ally McBeal (on a good day) all rolled into one. The next you are thinking black robes aren't your style, business is where your real interest lies, and the boardroom seems a better fit than the courtroom. In short, choosing an area of practice at the start of your legal career can be a difficult process. We understand.

As a mid-sized firm of over 60 lawyers, we can offer you exposure to a number of different practice areas during the early part of your career, and the flexibility to grow into a legal career that makes the best use of your unique talents and interests. Many of our lawyers are in fact active in more than one legal discipline, something that we feel benefits both our lawyers and our clients.

For more information on choosing an area of practice, as well as other discussions about different stages of student life and practical insights on making the transition from student to lawyer, please visit our website.
